To Whom It May Concern,

The Rising Foundation, in its partnership with Rosehill College, has been able to offer students opportunities to use their potential and to be leaders. These are often students who have not engaged with what the School can offer and so "TRF" has allowed them to experience success related to their particular talents.

Our Pastoral Care Team has been able to refer students to The Rising Foundation as a very effective way to have those students find outlets for their energies which do not take them into trouble with the Community. It is a 'top of the cliff' method that provides a positive pathway in a way that the School finds it difficult to offer.

We have always struggled to include whanau in students' education action plans. Having The Rising Foundation here provides co-ordinators with time and energy to include families. They go beyond this to have students gain strength and confidence through involvement with outdoor education programmes, mentoring and group therapy.

There is never a shortage of talent here amongst our rangatahi but we lack the resources to provide as much individual support as we would like. We have all seen students at this school, from modest backgrounds and with too many negative distractions, be uplifted into participation with, service and care for and leadership of fellow human beings through the work that The Rising Foundation does to unlock their potential.

Yours sincerely
